Técnico de diagnóstico - Transeje manual

Tren de transmisión

Descripción

Descripción

El tren de transmisión transmite la potencia del motor a las ruedas. En general, se clasifica en las siguientes categorías:

1. FF (vehículo con motor delante y tracción delantera)

La fuerza motriz del motor se transmite a través del diferencial del transeje a los ejes propulsores, las ruedas y los neumáticos de la izquierda y de la derecha.

2. FR (vehículo con motor delante y tracción trasera)

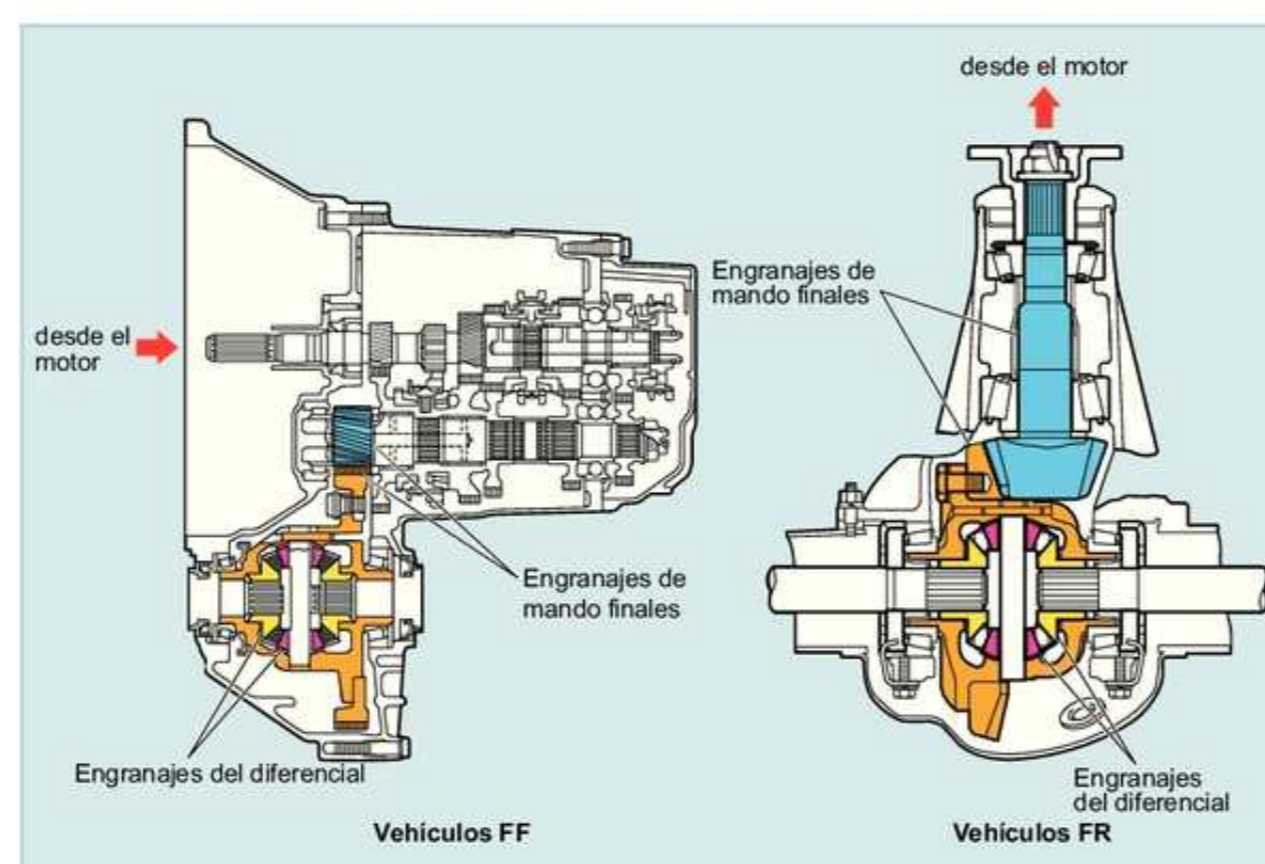

La fuerza motriz del motor se transmite a través de la transmisión y después a través del árbol de transmisión y el diferencial a los ejes propulsores (o eje axial), los eje axial, las ruedas y los neumáticos de la izquierda y de la derecha.

OBSERVACIÓN:

La combinación del eje propulsor y el eje axial también se denomina eje propulsor.

Diferencial

Estructura

El diferencial aumenta aún más el par transmitido a través de la transmisión y distribuye la fuerza motriz a los ejes propulsores izquierdo y derecho. Además, también es un engranaje del diferencial que genera la diferencia de velocidad de rotación entre la rueda interior y la rueda exterior en los virajes y ofrece una conducción suave en las curvas.

1. Engranajes de mando final

Los engranajes de mando final reducen la rotación del transeje (transmisión) para aumentar el par.

Los engranajes de mando final de un vehículo FR aumentan el par al cambiar de dirección.

2. Engranajes del diferencial

Los engranajes del diferencial crean dos velocidades de giro de rueda distintas para la conducción en curvas.
